DEAR ALUMNI AND FRIENDS,

Since I came on board as 12th president of Jacksonville State University in July 2015, the first lady and I have had the pleasure of meeting so many great people like you who care deeply about JSU. Many of you ask the same question: How can I help JSU reach its potential?

It is clear that you are invested in the future of your alma mater and we definitely need your support! I have identified three areas of focus, and alumni involvement is crucial for all three: enrollment, student success and philanthropy. Here’s how you can help:

Enrollment: I have initiated a new program called “Alumni Boots on the Ground,” through which alumni chapters, their members and other alumni in the area will help us identify and recruit qualified students. We already have alumni chapters that have taken the lead and successfully recruit excellent students to JSU on a regular basis. We will use their example and develop training and materials to help any and all alumni who want to help us recruit students. We hope to get this program rolled out early in 2016.

Student Success: We are matching JSU students with alumni mentors in their field through the new JSU alumni mentoring program. Alumni mentors will periodically contact their assigned student to see how they are doing and to help them make informed decisions on preparation for their future career. This effort should enhance student retention, progression, graduation and placement into jobs and provide a bond between Gamecock alumni and students. Please sign up at www.jsu.edu/mentoring.

Philanthropy: JSU cannot be successful in the future by relying solely on state support and tuition dollars to fund its budget. Donations from alumni, friends and organizations, in addition to grant support from a variety of agencies, will be critical to the university’s future of excellence. To contribute, please go to www.jsu.edu/giving.

Thank you for your continued support of Jacksonville State University. Together, we can bring JSU to even greater levels of excellence.

Go Gamecocks!

GREETINGS GAMECOCKS!

There are so many exciting things coming up this year, as 2016 marks several milestones for some of our alumni groups and we can’t wait to have everyone back on campus this fall.

Our International House Program will celebrate its 70th anniversary this year and we hope that all of our International Alumni can join us over Homecoming Weekend, Oct. 28-30, for our IHP alumni reunion on campus. Our Marching Southerners mark their 60th anniversary this year as well and we hope even more of our alumni will join us for the annual Southerners Reunion, Nov. 18-19.

I am blessed to be able to serve as your director of alumni relations – I have the best job in the world! Thank you for sharing your JSU experience with me and allowing us to be a part of your lives. We always want to hear from you. Let us know about all the amazing things that are happening in your life and we will keep you updated on all the amazing things happening with your alma mater.

Thank you for all you do to promote JSU. I hope to hear from you soon!

Go Gamecocks! Blow Southerners!

Nursing a Culture of Compassion

BY HEATHER GREENE
As a new mother at age 19, Christie Shelton struggled with fear and self-doubt when her infant daughter, Savannah, suffered from several illnesses that kept the family visiting health care facilities. Her life changed one day at a local hospital when a kind nursing student from JSU, who was completing her pediatric rotation, took time to educate the young mother. She introduced Shelton to her JSU nursing professor and they treated Savannah like an individual, not another name to check off the patient list.

“After I had that experience, I knew I wanted to be a nurse,” Shelton said. “Their kindness, caring and compassion lit a fire in me. I had experienced so many situations where, as a young mother, I was not treated well. I realized that I could make a difference for others walking the same path and that JSU was where I should begin that journey.”

Today, 27-year-old Savannah is an intensive care nurse in Georgia and Shelton is dean of the JSU College of Nursing. They are just two of the countless people across the globe whose lives have been touched by JSU Nursing.

Shelton – who earned a B.S.N. and M.S.N. from JSU and a Ph.D. from the University of Alabama in Birmingham – became dean of her alma mater in 2013. She is passionate about training the next generation of nurses and has hit the ground running at full speed in her new role at JSU. Her leadership is bringing out the best in her colleagues and several exciting new developments are taking place, including:

The Simulation Lab

Practice makes perfect, and perfected health care skills are what Shelton hopes to be the by-product of the new 3,600-square-foot JSU Simulation Center, which opened in January at Brookstone Physician Building beside Jacksonville Medical Center.

Shelton said the lab helps students learn to critically think through situations that are time sensitive and could have devastating consequences if poor decisions were made in a real-life scenario.

Katie Robinson, a JSU graduate and instructor in the nursing department, is serving as the simulation lab coordinator. She was recently selected as one of 20 professionals from across the U.S. to participate in the National League for Nursing’s Leadership Development Program for Simulation Educators. This one-year program will allow her to continue to advance as a simulation instructor.

“It has truly been an amazing journey seeing so many people come together in support of this project,” said Robinson. “I feel like a simple thank you would be an understatement as compared to the magnitude of impact this will have on student learning.”

White Coat Ceremony

In addition to being the first class with a simulation lab, JSU’s 2015-2016 nursing students also had the opportunity to take part in the first-ever White Coat Ceremony in September 2015. The Arnold P. Gold Foundation and the American Association of Colleges of Nursing selected JSU among 60 schools of nursing to receive a grant to host its first White Coat Ceremony. Although White Coat Ceremonies have been held by medical schools for more than 20 years, this is the first coordinated effort to offer similar events at nursing schools. The goal is to promote humanistic, patient-centered care among future generations of registered nurses.

Dr. Betsy Gulledge, associate dean and assistant professor, has been spearheading the ceremony at JSU. She said there has been a push in the medical community to incorporate the White Coat Ceremony into nursing schools, which allows incoming students to feel more ownership and take pride in their future profession.

“It was a very sentimental ceremony to them, and I feel like it highlighted the professional aspect of nursing,” Shelton said. “It really was a transition into a professional program.”

Gulledge added, “You could see the pride on their faces.”
The feedback from students and parents was so positive that the college decided to continue the program, and the second White Coat ceremony took place on January 28. It will now be held for every incoming class of nursing students.

Respiratory Therapy

JSU students also have the opportunity to pursue a brand new degree that will be the only program of its kind offered by a university in North Alabama. Recently, the Alabama Commission on Higher Education cleared the way for JSU to begin offering a new Bachelor of Science degree in respiratory therapy through the College of Nursing. While the program is expected to fully launch in Spring 2017, students can already declare respiratory therapy as a major.

In much the same way that JSU offers a transitional program for R.N. to B.S.N. students, Shelton explained that the next step for the respiratory therapy program is to work on a transition for students who hold associate degrees in the field already.

Looking Ahead

Recently, the master’s in community health degree at JSU has also had a new addition: two new concentrations to choose from. Students pursing a master’s in community health can now choose a concentration in either nursing education or emergency management.

Under the leadership of Dr. Rebecca Peinhardt, professor and director of graduate nursing programs, the college is currently in the process of submitting a proposal to the Alabama Commission on Higher Education to receive a B.S.N to D.N.P (Doctorate of Nurse Practice) program with tracks for family nurse practitioner and adult gerontology acute care nurse practitioner. A recent survey showed that 330 out of 370 current or graduated nursing majors at JSU would like to come back for this degree if JSU gains this program.

A new Deans’ Scholars Program for Early Acceptance gives qualified high school students the chance to participate in the college’s activities. Those who successfully complete the program, go on to enroll at JSU as freshmen and major in nursing are automatically guaranteed a seat in the program.

The Nursing Family

JSU’s College of Nursing offers a cutting-edge nursing experience to rival any major university, but with a small-town feel that knits a true sense of family among those in the college. Shelton discussed how students from other universities are shocked to learn that JSU instructors know their students by name and even more surprised to know that JSU nursing students often have their instructor’s cell phone numbers to stay connected and ask emergency study questions.

Shelton explained that the theme this year for the faculty and staff in the College of Nursing is “Relational Connections.” Their slogan is “connect with your students because when you connect, you have influence with your students.” This is the experience that JSU nursing students have come to love and expect – and why they make lifelong connections with their faculty mentors.
The JSU College of Nursing has been reaccredited through 2025 by the Commission on Collegiate Nursing Education, a national accrediting agency recognized by the U.S. Secretary of Education that ensures the quality and integrity of nursing programs across the country.

Both JSU’s baccalaureate and the master’s degree programs were determined to have met all accreditation standards following an on-site visit in March. A voluntary, self-regulatory process, accreditation supports and encourages continuing self-assessment, growth and improvement by nursing programs.

“We are very pleased with the outcome of our visit,” said Christie Shelton, dean of the JSU College of Nursing. “Preparing for the once-in-ten-year site visit was quite an undertaking and many of us were novice in regards to that experience. However, we collaborated together, sought expert advice, and worked diligently to prepare and showcase the evidence of our quality nursing programs. These efforts paid off with a verbal report indicating all standards were met in March, followed by this official notification, recently received.”
Fans know him as Jacksonville State University’s starting quarterback, a first team All-American, the 2015 Ohio Valley Conference Offensive Player of the Year and the FCS Quarterback of the Year. But Eli Jenkins is more than just a great college football player.

Growing up in Birmingham, Ala. – just down the road from Legion Field – he has known two things his entire life: church and football. His father, Rev. Reginald Jenkins, served as the pastor of the family’s church where Eli, his sister Brittany and their mother, Aundria, regularly attended.

“Growing up, we never struggled, even though we didn’t have a lot of money,” Jenkins said. “My dad and my mom always found a way to get stuff done. And my dad was always there. I could talk to him about anything. He always supported me. If I wanted to play football, he supported me. Whatever I wanted to do, he supported me.”

Young Eli started playing football when he was four years old, idolizing players like Michael Vick and, later on, Cam Newton. His first position, though, was not as quarterback but rather, as a defensive end.

“I can’t remember, really,” Jenkins laughed, “but I think I was pretty good. And then I guess they saw I was kind of fast, and the next year I moved to running back. And then I started playing quarterback at seven years old, and I’ve been playing quarterback ever since.”

His days of pee wee football far behind him, the JSU junior is now arguably the best quarterback in the state of Alabama and has helped carry the Gamecocks through a record-breaking season including a national title game. Jenkins said it wouldn’t have been possible without some very special people: the fans.

“They put a lot of energy into us,” he said. “Just to have them there, we want to do real good things for them. They support us, and we love them for that.”

So how does a top-ranked quarterback get ready to play in front of 20,000 or more fans each week? Jenkins has his own pre-game rituals.

“After we go through the Cock Walk, I walk down to the other end zone and I touch both pylons,” Jenkins said. And he always listens to Future’s “Mad Luv” and Doe B’s “Turn Up” before every game.

The junior has another year of eligibility left in college play and, following the FCS National Championship on Jan. 9, he confirmed that he will be staying at JSU for his senior year. The exercise science major is committed to leading his team back to the national championship in 2017, after which he plans to graduate from JSU and hopefully play football for even bigger crowds.

“If you play college football, you definitely want the chance to keep playing,” Jenkins said. “So if I get the blessing to keep playing [professionally] I definitely want to do that.”

Until then, though, Jenkins is working to finish his degree and parent his two-year-old son, Kaydon.

“I don’t think I want to start him playing football until he’s a little older,” Jenkins said, when asked if Kaydon would be following in his father’s footsteps anytime soon. “I’m going to take a basketball, a soccer ball and a football and put them in front him, and whichever one he picks up, that’s what we’ll focus on. And if he doesn’t want to play sports at all, that’s fine with me.”

With so much to be proud of and even more to look forward to, the words of JSU head football coach John Grass ring truer than ever: “It’s a special time to be a Gamecock.”

And with players like Eli Jenkins, it really is.
Shelby Faith King is just one face of the numerous students who are known by name by the faculty and staff of JSU’s College of Nursing. Growing up with a mom who was a labor and delivery nurse at St. Vincent’s Hospital in Birmingham, King had soundly decided her career before entering college.

When asked why she selected JSU, King always responds with “JSU chose me!” During her senior year at Oak Mountain High School, King heard of the financial aid options at JSU, and a campus tour of the “Friendliest Campus in the South” made her college decision “a done deal.”

King’s “whirlwind” transition from the high traffic-filled route of Hwy. 280 to the slow-paced Pelham Road proved to be quite “pleasant.” Regarding JSU and the surrounding area, King stated, “It’s the best of both worlds. I think it’s the perfect size.”

Like many nursing students, King loves the close-knit community in JSU nursing. When she had to have an emergency root canal and her mom was unavailable at work, King called one of her instructors to ask what she should do. In fact, she calls the nursing faculty her “second family” and loves the fact that the faculty consider the students “their family as well.”

“IT’s more than a blessing,” King stated. “Two of my friends are in nursing school in larger schools, and I don’t think that they have had the privilege of getting just the slightest taste of hospitality and genuine care that they [JSU nursing instructors] have for their students.”

In the chaos of college life, King often finds solace when the nursing instructors openly share their own fears, failures, and real life stories, which humanizes the instructors to her. “You want your nurse to be a human when you go into the hospital, and so that’s what they are. They’re nurses before they’re teachers,” said King.

King had the opportunity to be a part of the first-ever White Coat Ceremony at JSU this fall. “It was very, very prestigious...and very symbolic,” she said. During the ceremony, she was struck by the phrase, “Nursing is the most noble profession.” King said one might not think that giving baths to someone in a nursing home is a very “noble” task at first, but affirms that when she contemplates how she is helping someone else, she finds even the most menial tasks “noble” in the nursing world.

In Fall 2015, King was voted JSU’s Homecoming Queen; her slogan was, quite appropriately, “King for Queen.” She is also a member of Alpha Omicron Pi and Phi Eta Sigma, served as a student senator, and enjoys volunteering any chance she gets.

When she is not studying, King enjoys knitting, running and hiking. If she ever has time to watch television, she likes to select educational programs such as documentaries and also enjoys reading fiction and medical topics. Her parents are Sandy and Randy King. She has two sisters and a brother, and greatly values family time. Her younger sister has now caught the Gamecock bug and has been infected with a love for JSU from King’s own passion for the university.

In the summer, King, a GO! Leader, can be found walking freshmen students around JSU’s campus and explaining why she loves her university so much. JSU is proud of King and all the other outstanding students in the College of Nursing.
When Auburn Tiger fans came out to their first home game of the season on Sept. 12, they expected to catch a glimpse of the university’s new $13.9 million scoreboard – not to see the JSU Gamecocks score the first touchdown recorded on it. The near upset by Jax State in overtime, now known as the “Scare at Jordan-Hare,” was just a sign of things to come. The Gamecocks went on to have one of their most successful seasons in school history, culminating in an appearance at the NCAA Division I National Championship Game on Jan. 9.
two seasons as a head coach. He also tied for the best start to a head coaching career in FCS history through his first 26 games (23-3). He was named the OVC Roy Kidd Coach of the Year for the second-straight season and the National Coach of the Year by the American Football Coaches Association.

After becoming the first FCS team in history to take a ranked FBS foe, then-No. 6 Auburn, to overtime, JSU then rattled off 12-straight wins to claim its second-straight OVC crown to earn the No. 1 National Seed and roll into the FCS Championship Game in Frisco, Texas. The Gamecocks were ranked No. 1 in the nation for the first time in school history and held that spot in at least one poll for the final 11 weeks of the regular season. They finished the season ranked No. 2, the school’s highest ranking in the final polls in Division I history.

The North Dakota State University Bison stopped the Gamecocks from claiming their first national title since 1992, and it was the only game the Gamecocks would lose since the second week of the season. Jax State finished with 13 wins, which tied for the most wins in school history, and just two losses.

Several school records were shattered this season, including total offense (7,613), rushing yards (4,511), passing yards (3,102), points scored (584) and tackles for a loss (135). Senior running back Troyamine Pope broke the school and OVC single-season rushing record with 1,788 yards, while his 8.2 yards per carry led the nation. He was named the 2015 College Football Performance Awards FCS Running Back of the Year.

Junior quarterback Eli Jenkins’ 3,949 yards of total offense was also a school record. The Birmingham, Ala., native was named the Ohio Valley Conference Offensive Player of the Year and the FCS Quarterback of the Year by the FCS Athletic Director’s Association. Read more about JSU’s Lucky No. 7 on page 8. Junior wide receiver Josh Barge broke the single-season record for catches with 92, receiving yards with 1,145 and touchdown catches with 11.

On the defensive side of the ball, sophomore Darius Jackson and senior Chris Landrum, Sr., each had 19.0 tackles for a loss to break the school record in that category.

The Gamecocks finished the year ranked fourth nationally in total offense, third in rushing offense and second with 362 first downs. Defensively, JSU was third nationally with 20 interceptions, while ranking 12th in total defense.

The Gamecocks had 17 All-OVC selections and five players earn All-America honors, Eli Jenkins (1st Team STATS, College Sporting News, ADA, 2nd Team AP), Casey Dunn (1st Team AFCA, College Sporting News, 2nd Team STATS), Jermaine Hough (College Sporting News, 2nd Team AP, 3rd Team STATS), Troyamine Pope (3rd Team STATS, College Sporting News, 3rd Team AP) and Chris Landrum (3rd Team STATS).

All-American Quarterback Eli Jenkins has confirmed he will be back for his senior season and hopes to lead the Gamecocks back to the National Championship game in Frisco. Shortly after the game, Jenkins tweeted, “That was a good run. I wish I could’ve played better for my team and fans, but I’ll be back in Frisco next year I promise.”

With the next season expected to be just as promising as the last, fans are encouraged to go ahead and book refundable hotel rooms and purchase tickets in advance for next year’s national championship. Bison fans were able to get their hooves on most of the tickets because they purchased as soon as they went on sale last summer. Let’s stop that from happening again. Buy tickets early! You can always resell on the NCAA Ticket Exchange if your plans change.

Dr. John T. Finley would be proud of his marching band. The former music department head founded the Marching Southerners and Ballerinas in 1956, when it was little more than a “small instrumental group,” according to current band director Dr. Ken Bodiford. Fifty-nine years later, in July 2015, Finley passed away, but not without leaving a legacy that has shaped thousands of band members and fans alike.

When Finley was first put in charge of Jacksonville State Teachers College’s band, it didn’t have uniforms, organization or discipline. Finley changed that. “He’s the one who really started the band’s tradition of being good,” Bodiford said.

Finley added a dance line modeled after the Radio City Rockettes. Today, they are known as the Marching Ballerinas, and they still wear uniforms similar to the red and white “Santa suits” the line wore in 1956. Both the Ballerinas and the Southerners got their names from an original band member who submitted the suggestions as part of a contest Finley held.

Finley also believed that a marching band could play both loudly and well, and he taught the band an orchestral breathing warm-up that has persisted throughout the years.

After completing his doctorate, Finley was named head of the music department. Dr. David L. Walters took over as band director in 1961 and, according to Bodiford, he and Finley quickly became friends.

Together, they continued to build the Southerners with Walters leading the band for 30 years. Sadly, Walters followed Finley in death by only a few months – passing away on Dec. 30.

“Everyone just fell in love with Dr. Walters’ personality immediately, and he started recruiting,” Bodiford said. “And from that point on, the band really started building. So it was kind of a tag-team effort between Dr. Finley and Dr. Walters that has really given us what we have today. When I came on in ’94, I just tried to go back to running the band the way Dr. Walters ran it. I went back to the roots. And I hope whoever takes my place after me will look at that tradition and realize it works.”
This dedication to tradition is in part what has led the Marching Southerners to one of its most successful years to date. This fall, the Alabama Media Group hosted a competition to find “Alabama’s Best College Marching Band,” pitting the state’s 19 college marching band programs against one another in rounds of fan-based voting. After three weeks of intense Internet competition on al.com, only one band remained: the Southerners.

“I never try to say that one band is better than another because – fortunately, in the state of Alabama – we really do have some great college bands,” Bodiford said. “If you look at some of the other states in the country they can’t compare to the state of Alabama with just the quality of the marching bands. I want to give out props to everybody, but we’re very thankful that our fans came through for us and voted.”

As the band prepares to celebrate its 60th anniversary in 2016, it is also preparing for the ultimate honor. The Southerners have been selected to play aboard the USS Missouri battleship on the island of Oahu, Hawaii during the weeklong commemoration of the 75th anniversary of the attack on Pearl Harbor next December.

“We were contacted about it about a year ago,” Bodiford said. “They saw us at an exhibition in Atlanta. Someone took a video with their cellphone and showed it to the committee, and they contacted me after that. So I sent them a video of the patriotic show we did in 2009, and they just went bananas over that.”

The band will arrive in Honolulu on Dec. 9, 2016 for a weeklong tour that includes the USS Missouri performance as well as a visit to the Arizona Memorial and other attractions. After their performance, the band will be presented with an American flag that flew over Pearl Harbor. The JSU Alumni Association is organizing a travel package for alumni and friends who want to join the Southerners in Hawaii (see page 18).

Leading the band to Hawaii in 2016 will be its four newly selected drum majors. While head drum major Daniel O’Donnell will be returning for his third year, assistant drum majors Andrew Record and Alana Ivey, as well as backfield drum major Koree Martin, will be picking up the baton for the first time. For them, this upcoming season is more than just the trips and awards: it is the fulfillment of a dream.

“To me, it is the opportunity to help continue the tradition that is the Marching Southerners,” said Record, a sophomore majoring in finance. “I’m honored to have been elected alongside three other great leaders to help lead the Southerners through 2016.”

Martin, a junior majoring in business, agrees.

“To me, being a drum major for the Southerners means two things: being a positive influence on members of the band and setting the example both on and off the field. I think these two things are essential for a successful Southerners drum major and I truly think the four of us possess these qualities and more.”

The Marching Southerners and Ballerinas have come a long way since Finley and Walters created their now-classic style and sound, but the one idea that has remained is that each student should strive for excellence on and off the field, in music and in life. Excellent musicians make for an excellent band – one that is recognized from London to Hawaii, gets standing ovations from the fans of opposing football teams, and thrives on its traditions even 60 years later. And for the Southerners, that tradition has always been one of excellence.
The U.S. Department of Education has awarded JSU a grant totaling more than $330K to establish a Center of Excellence for Veteran Student Success on campus.

The grant, along with matching funds from JSU, will establish a stand-alone center for veteran students with the goal of increasing enrollment, good academic standing, persistence and graduation rates at the university.

“Survey data from our veteran students identified their unique needs and, over the past two years, we have worked to provide the infrastructure to meet those needs,” said Allison Newton, principal investigator on the project. “This grant will allow us to create a stand-alone, ‘one-stop-shop’ model program that can be replicated not only in our state and region, but nationally.”

The center will support veteran students and ensure their college success by providing the academic, financial, physical and social services as identified by the veteran survey.

Gretchen Richards, co-principal investigator for the project, said, “The Department of Education has allowed JSU and the Research Center for Veteran Support Services to begin an exciting and innovative program to give back to our men and women who served our country. This is an exciting time for our university, the center, and most of all our veterans and active military students.”

The Center of Excellence for Veteran Student Success, along with the Research Center for Veteran Support Services and the JSU Veteran Student Organization, will actively provide programs and opportunities for veterans, both on campus and in the community.
Masterpieces Back in the Spotlight

The doors of Hammond Gallery – the exhibit space for the JSU Department of Art – were locked all last summer. Few knew what astounding transformations were taking place inside until a grand reopening celebration was held in September.

Workers replaced outdated carpet flooring with sleek hardwood. Carpeted walls were ousted in favor of sophisticated white drywall. A kitchenette was added in the back of the gallery to accommodate food preparation for events. Over the fall semester, several faculty, student and guest shows were on display in the renovated gallery. Many more are planned for spring.

Located in Hammond Hall at JSU, across from the Theron Montgomery

Building on Trustee Circle, the Hammond Gallery typically hosts three shows each month, overseen by gallery coordinator Ray Wetzel. Gallery hours are Monday-Friday, 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Visitors must see the department secretary for access. Admission is free and open to the public. Check out a list of show openings at www.jsu.edu/art/hammond-gallery.html.
Chandni Khadka came on board as director of the JSU International House and Programs on Jan. 4, where she provides leadership for the International House and acts as an advisor for international students. She is responsible for International Programs at JSU, providing campus-wide support and activities to promote cultural diversity, assessing program needs, implementing and administering appropriate services for students and managing staff.

Khadka recently served as director of International Student Services in the Office of International Programs at Arkansas State University, having previously served as senior admissions officer and coordinator of special projects in the same office since 2011. She holds a bachelor’s in marketing from Nepal College of Management and an MBA in management from the University of North Alabama. She has been awarded the Dale Carnegie “Highest Award for Achievement.”

Dr. Teresa Reed, professor of English, served as interim director for 2014-2015 following the retirement of longtime director Dr. John Ketterer. David Myer, instructor for English, served as interim director for the Fall 2015 term before Khadka arrived in January. The university thanks Reed and Myer for their service and welcomes Chandni to the JSU family.
AACSB Accreditation represents the highest standard of achievement for business schools worldwide. Less than 5% of the world’s 13,000 business programs have earned AACSB Accreditation. FOUR JSU LEGENDS
Inducted into Athletics Hall of Fame

Earl Warren, one of the best players in JSU’s basketball history, played four seasons for the Gamecocks and became just the 12th player in JSU history to score 1,000 or more points.

The Oneonta, Ala., native finished his brilliant four-year career with 1,156 points, adding 461 assists and 226 steals. He led the Gamecocks to an impressive 93-28 record during his career and helped Jax State advance to the NCAA Division II playoffs three times.

During his sophomore season in 1983, he helped JSU to the GSC Tournament Championship and to the Elite Eight after winning the regional title. As a junior, he averaged 14.5 points and shot 55.9 percent from the floor to help JSU to a 23-8 record and into the NCAA Division II Regional finals.

As a senior, Warren made the key steal with just seconds remaining, then calmly sank two free-throws to give the Gamecocks a one-point win over South Dakota State and the NCAA Division II National Championship. He averaged 13.9 points and helped JSU post a perfect 16-0 record in league play, the first team to go undefeated in GSC history.

Two All-Americans, one 1,000-point scorer in basketball, and one of the most successful coaches in Gamecock history were inducted into the JSU Athletic Hall of Fame on Nov. 15.

James Hobbs has coached at JSU for almost 40 years, including 16 years as an assistant basketball coach and more than 30 years as golf coach. Coaching both the men’s and women’s golf programs, Hobbs led the Gamecocks to 19 NCAA regional appearances, including 12 appearances after JSU moved to Division I in 1993.

On the men’s side, the Gamecocks won nine conference championships and Hobbs was voted Coach of the Year six times. He had a pair of OVC Golfers of the Year and four OVC Freshman of the Year honorees. On the women’s side, the Gamecocks dominated the Ohio Valley Conference, winning the OVC Championship in 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008 and 2012, and making five total appearances in the NCAA Golf Regionals. Hobbs was named the OVC Women’s Golf Coach of the Year in 2006, 2007 and 2008, with four OVC Players of the Year and five OVC Freshmen of the Year honors.

Hobbs served as an assistant basketball coach under Bill Jones for 16 years. During that time, the Gamecocks made eight appearances in the NCAA Division II Tournament, including a national championship in 1985, two Final Four appearances and three Elite Eight appearances.

Montressa Kirby, a former Gamecock quarterback, played from 1995-98 and earned All-America honors. As a senior in 1998, he was named the Southland Football League Offensive Player of the Year after completing 168-of-318 passes for 2,271 yards and 15 touchdowns. He also was the second leading rusher with 114 attempts for 310 yards and seven touchdowns.

The Anniston, Ala., native set 14 school records including most passing attempts in one game (48) and in a season (418), most completions in one game (28) and in a season (218), most touchdown passes in a game (5), most passing yards in a game (417) and the longest touchdown pass (93). Kirby completed 492-of-966 career passes and ranks second on the all-time JSU list with 6,587 career-passing yards.

Craig Stevens is one of the most decorated golfers in JSU history and is a two-time All-American for the Gamecocks. He set the school record for the all-time low stroke average with a 72.96 in 1985, which stood for more than 20 years, to earn his first All-America honor. He led the team to a 111-32-1 record in 1985 and an eighth-place finish in the NCAA National Championships.

He played as an individual in the 1986 NCAA National Championships and finished in the Top 45 to earn his second straight All-America honor. He helped the Gamecocks post a 226-109-2 with five team championships during his career, and had the all-time team low stroke average of 297.5.

Stevens won five individual titles and was an All-Gulf South Conference selection in 1985 after winning medalist honors in the GSC Tournament. He played head-to-head with PGA professionals Lee Janzen and Hugh Royer during his collegiate career. Stevens also earned Academic All-America honors his senior year.
When the Gamecock Women’s Volleyball team opened their home season against Jackson State on Friday, Oct. 2, 2015, they were the first JSU team to compete in a much-improved Pete Mathews Coliseum.

Renovations at “The Pete” began in Spring 2015 and continued throughout the summer. Included in the upgrades were new chair back sideline seating, new bench baseline seating, a new playing surface, new scorer’s tables, new paint and a team video room. These upgrades followed a 2014 facelift that added air conditioning and new lighting to the building, which had not undergone a major renovation since its construction in 1974.

The Jacksonville State men’s basketball team played their first game on their home court on Nov. 3 in an exhibition game against Miles College. This was followed by 17 home games during its 2015-2016 season.

“It feels different,” men’s basketball coach James Green said of the upgrades when his team began practicing in early October. You can look at pictures and try to get an idea of what it looks like, but until you come in here and feel the floor and actually look around in here you have no idea. I can tell you our guys feel better and even people that have been coming in here while we are practicing are talking about the improvement. It’s a very, very exciting time for Jacksonville State basketball.”

Green said he believes the facelift will pay huge dividends for the program in the future and will also be a bonus to the Gamecock fan base.

“It shows that we are stepping up our commitment, and I think everybody involved did a great job,” he added. “I feel like we really did a good job of taking every dollar that we had and we got the most out of it. I can tell you that coaches and players really appreciate it, and when our fans come in here, they’re really going to enjoy this place.”

Beyond sports, the coliseum is used for graduations, concerts and other large events. On Nov. 11, JSU and the City of Jacksonville partnered to host the first community-wide Veterans Day ceremony in the Coliseum. JSU’s first commencement in the new Pete took place on December 18.

THE CLASS OF ’65 CELEBRATES ITS 50TH REUNION

While Homecoming always brings Gamecocks of all ages back home to roost for a few days, a very special group of alumni had the opportunity to reunite after receiving their diplomas 50 years ago. For a few, this was their first time back in Jacksonville since their graduation, and obviously, there have been a few changes around campus in the last half-century. Here’s what a few of the “Golden Gamecocks” had to say about days gone by and the JSU of today:

James Carroll, a business alumnus from Addison, Ala., said, “One of the fondest memories I have is the band playing ‘Stars Fell on Alabama.’”

Bobbie Raper Andrews, a biology alumnus from Birmingham, Ala., reminisced, “We studied hard, we laughed hard. We were up on the square when Kennedy was shot, and someone came up to me and said, ‘The president’s been shot!’ And I said, ‘Who would shoot Houston Cole?’”

Margie Clayton Klein, from Decatur, Ga., said, “I thought this was a great opportunity to do whatever I wanted to do and be whoever I wanted to be... We’d walk into town to the post office to look at the wanted posters just for something to do.”

Both Andrews and Klein were roommates their freshman year of college and have been best friends ever since, despite the fact that Andrews initially thought Klein a “know-it-all” and Klein believed Andrews to be a “goody-two-shoes.”

Jerry Estes majored in math and went on to work on the Saturn V at the Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville and later for IBM. He has fond memories of participating in the “Mobile Radio-Isotope Lab” during his senior year and loved science club activities. On his first trip back to Jacksonville since 1965, Estes stated, “When I was here in ’65, the tallest building was the main building: Bibb Graves Hall. I understand they have a new football stadium.”

Glenda Ann Justice, an English major with a history minor, taught English for more than 27 years after graduation. This reunion proved to be her third return to JSU since 1965. Regarding the changes and her own memories, Justice said JSU is “A different place, a very different place! I attended almost all home ball games – football, basketball, baseball... I went to every concert that I could, and I enjoyed archery and tennis.”

Dottie (’65) and Joe Garner (’61) enjoy returning to JSU during the fall for “JSU football and the Southerners.” Dottie recalls marching with the Southerners, “watching a friend leave class when he was notified that his guard unit had been activated for the Bay of Pigs crisis,” “learning President Kennedy had been shot and killed in Dallas,” and knowing that “the next step” after graduation “would be Vietnam” for many of her friends.

Charles and Gail Gamble take great pride in having been voted Mr. and Miss Jax State by their fellow classmates. Charles was a law professor and dean at the University of Alabama, and Gail was a college and high school teacher.

Marjorie “Maggie” Naylor Muegge, a Marching Ballerina and business and economics major, laughed when asked how much JSU has changed in 50 years. She recalls the strict male/female dorm rules and explained that they had an early week-day curfew of 9 p.m. Also, three failures to pass a clean room inspection resulted in being thrown out of the dorm. As ladies could not live off campus, being thrown out of the dorm meant being expelled from school. Desiring to be a stockbroker in the days when women weren’t stockbrokers, Muegge finally realized her dream and later worked in real estate.

While it’s safe to say that JSU has grown by leaps and bounds since 1965, there still exists the sense of family that every one of the “Golden Gamecocks” mentioned during their luncheon. As they, and all the current alumni of JSU, can attest, it’s great to be a part of the Gamecock Family! See you this fall, Class of 1966!
They have represented America on the streets of London and New York, but on Dec. 11, 2016, the Marching Southerners and Ballerinas could perform their most meaningful appearance to date as they join their nation in recognizing a day that “lives in infamy.”

The Marching Southerners and Ballerinas have been selected to perform aboard the USS Missouri battleship on Oahu during the week of the 75th anniversary of the attack on Pearl Harbor. The band, which numbers close to 500, will arrive in Honolulu on Dec. 9, 2016 for the weeklong tour that includes the USS Missouri performance as well as a visit to the Arizona Memorial and other points of interest.

Originally, they had been invited to perform along with bands from throughout the country in the national ceremony on Dec. 7, Pearl Harbor Day. Because the students could not miss finals for the performance they have been given the opportunity to perform by themselves aboard the USS Missouri, according to JSU Band Director Kenneth Bodiford. After their performance, the band will be presented an American flag that flew over Pearl Harbor.

“I’ve always been a patriotic person,” said Bodiford. “In a way, this performance means a lot more to me than a lot of the other things we’ve done. To be able to hear the Southerners play patriotic music there where the events of December 7, 1941 took place is going to be really, really special for the band. When the kids get there and see the video and footage of what happened while they’re standing in the place where it happened, it will be something they will never forget.”

It will definitely be a special moment to witness, and JSU alumni and friends are invited to accompany the band on the trip. Organized by Alumni Affairs, tour packages start at $2,350 per person for quad occupancy (four people per room), which includes flight, hotel, and some meals. Payment plans are available. Questions? Looking back at JSU alumnus Greg Morrow’s career is like flipping through the pages of a history book. His company, Southern Custom Exhibits, has been bringing the past to life through interactive media exhibits since he wrote its business plan as a class project during his senior year at JSU more than 26 years ago.

From Alaska to Hawaii and all points in between, the company’s portfolio of more than 500 installations is staggering in its size and historical significance. SCE designs, builds and installs everything from TV studio sets to kiosks and lobby displays, including the recently updated JSU Field House lobby. They have built exhibits and topographic maps for a number of National Parks and historic sites, including the Grand Canyon and the Alexander Hamilton Memorial in New York City.

But perhaps the most significant installation in the company’s history was also the most difficult to put together – if not physically, then emotionally, said Morrow. Last September, Morrow was on hand for the dedication of the $26 million visitor center at the Flight 93 National Memorial in Shanksville, Pa. The monument for the fourth plane hijacked on Sept. 11, 2001 is near the crash site and contains tributes to the 40 passengers and crew who lost their lives when they thwarted the hijackers believed headed for the U.S. Capitol.

The installation took nine months to build and required Morrow’s crew to relive the victims’ final moments. The latter proved a heavy burden. Among the many artifacts on display at the center are photos of each passenger, pieces of the United Airlines 757 that were taken from the site, and voice recordings from that horrific day.

“We actually have the recordings where you can pick up a handset and listen to them,” Morrow said. “We had to listen to them to create the exhibit and it was a real struggle to do it. They were just too disturbing to hear.”

Also difficult: finding a way to mount and display the mangled, barely recognizable pieces of plane wreckage. “We had to do some unique things to get them to work,” Morrow said.

Then there were the display items with backstories too horrific to process. The driver’s license belonging to doomed flight hero Todd Beamer, which was retrieved from the top of a tree after being blown there during the plane’s impact and explosion. Silverware from first class that had been buried deep underground when the plane plowed upside down and nose first into the Pennsylvania countryside.

The day before the exhibit opened to the public, the families of the victims came... by for a private walkthrough. Morrow had been there for a week with his crew, overseeing final installation details to make certain that the victims’ stories of heroism and strength would be preserved as part of a grieving nation’s narrative. It is such attention to detail and personal connections that have driven SCE since Morrow and his father Elvin began the company in 1990. Both Elvin Morrow and his wife, Sarah, are now deceased.

Today Morrow runs the company with his sister, Debbie, also a JSU alumna and former Alpha Xi Delta (Nursing’89). The pair employs JSU alumni John Lee, Derrick Palmer and Levi Raven at their company, which averages between 10-30 employees, depending upon workload. Morrow received his B.S. in management in 1988. As a senior final, he had to put together a business plan and present it to his class. At the time, Morrow’s father was working in the trade show exhibit industry in Atlanta. Father and son had experience building furniture, and so the idea of a business that they could build together just seemed like the right project.

“I wanted to do something cool and different – it’s kind of the story of my life to be unique,” he recalled. “I thought about it and then I approached dad with the idea. I sat him down and said, ‘What if we started this museum exhibit business?’ I wrote the report – it was really in-depth. I had to write out the plan, the projections and the five-year report. Essentially, I did the business plan for the company. We started it two years later.”

Morrow’s first project after JSU was at Universal Studios in Orlando, where he built one of the scenes of the ET ride, a giant model city of 35,000 square feet. As soon as that project wrapped he was asked to do the same for Universal Hollywood.

With Morrow’s parents newly retired, the family dug in to build the business. Each brought specialized skills that put them on the right track out of the gate.

Elvin had the manufacturing background, Sarah was adept at accounting, financials and office management, and Greg brought modeling design, electronics and graphics talent. “It was the magic combination,” Morrow said.

The company’s first projects were the Jefferson Memorial, and then the north and south rims of the Grand Canyon. Within a year, they had $80,000 in sales. By year three, annual sales had grown to $800,000. “The stars aligned is the only way I can explain it,” Morrow remembered. “It’s been like a snowball rolling down hill ever since.”

One of the first projects SCE did for the National Parks Service was the Great Basin National Park in Nevada. Next came Big Bend National Park in Texas. The company grew so rapidly that, 10 years after the company began, sister Debbie left nursing to join the family business. “We’ve controlled our growth at about the size we want,” said Morrow. “We just want to do high-quality work and stay the size we are now. We enjoy the work; we enjoy the people.”

SCE is a turnkey company that employs all the talent it needs for its projects in-house, from the design to the engineering to the fabrication. The company employs software engineers, graphic designers, carpenters, and even videographers. A single job could include everything from the road signage to the exhibits to the documentary film that visitors watch. SCE has produced more than 60 documentary films to date to accompany some of its 560+ installations.

The variety of projects and locations is what keeps the business interesting, according to Morrow. “You never know what someone’s going to call and ask you to build. I like for clients to tell me they have the money for me to be creative,” he said. “Doing what we do is the easy part. The hardest thing is the scheduling.”

During the weeks leading up to Christmas, Morrow shuttled back and forth between Alabama and New York, renewing some of the nation’s most recognized and iconic public spaces in New York Harbor. When Hurricane Sandy came ashore in New Jersey in late October 2012, the entire region was ravaged, including the Statue of Liberty and the Ellis Island Immigration Museum. SCE got the call when it came time to clean up and refurbish these facilities.

“This work is very rewarding because you’re touching so many people,” he said. “Work becomes legacy when you’re touching so many lives.”

SCE also gives Morrow the opportunity to pass his parents’ work ethic down to the next generation. Last summer, he took his son, Kyle, a JSU sophomore, on the road to work at the Grand Canyon, the Flight 93 Museum, and the Statue of Liberty. While the younger Morrow spent the summer learning outside the classroom, his dad enjoyed the opportunity to reconnect. “It was kind of unique to spend that time with Kyle because it took me back to when I worked with my dad,” he said.

What is next for the SCE story? After projects in New York, the Grand Tetons and Abraham Lincoln’s birthplace are complete, they will head to Alaska, where the company will outfit the visitors center in Kenai Fjords National Park, one of the most popular launch ports for Alaskan cruises.

While many count on JSU to help them get where they’re going, for Greg Morrow, JSU has also been a large part of where he’s been, from that first day when his future was written in a 400-level business course.

“JSU did good for me,” he said. “I wouldn’t change anything about my education and my time as a JSU student.”

Simple acts can change the world. When Rosa Parks refused to give up her bus seat to a white passenger on December 1, 1955, she didn’t know it would spark the Montgomery Bus Boycott and, in turn, the Civil Rights Movement. The bone-tired seamstress was just trying to get home. Similarly, fellow Alabamian Lilly Ledbetter didn’t set out to amend the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The Goodyear employee simply wanted to be paid the same wages as her male coworkers. One simple act of defiance by these brave women changed history.

Born in Jacksonville, Ala., in 1938—the daughter of an Anniston Army Depot mechanic Lilly McDaniel Ledbetter grew up picking cotton and milking cows on the family farm in Possum Trot. After graduating from Jacksonville High School in 1956, her strong work ethic served her well as she advanced from an associate at H&R Block to an office manager at an accounting firm and doctor’s office. She even worked at JSU in the mid-1970s as assistant director of Financial Aid.

“The day I started work, I walked onto campus thinking about what my life would have been like had I gone there,” Ledbetter penned in her autobiography, “Grace and Grit.” “I didn’t dwell on it too much. In my own way, I’d gotten to college after all. Working on campus and helping eager, grateful students in need go to college was something I looked forward to daily.”

The mother of two was initially discouraged from working outside the home, but she enjoyed earning her own wages and supporting the family income. With her extra income, she was able to provide her children things they would otherwise go without – from cheerleading uniforms to college tuition. With the goal of sending her children, Vickie and Phillip, to college at JSU, she decided to apply for a manager’s position at Goodyear in Gadsden.

In 1979, Ledbetter started her 19-year career at Goodyear. She trained in all the plant’s various departments and divisions and her first supervisor assignment was to manage third shift stock prep in the radial division. Over the years, she endured injuries and sexual harassment with little complaint – believing her hard work would speak for itself. Then one day before work, she found an anonymous note dropped in her cubby that listed the salaries of three other managers in her area. She was bringing home thousands less per year than men doing the same job.

Ledbetter realized she was one in a long line of women to fall victim to America’s wage gap. In 2015, women still earned just 77 cents for every dollar a man earned. According to the White House, “This significant gap is more than a statistic – it has real life consequences.
When women, who make up nearly half the workforce, bring home less money each day, it means they have less for the everyday needs of their families, and over a lifetime of work, far less savings for retirement."

Ledbetter could have taken the easy route, dropped the issue and retired. Thinking of generations of women before her and those to follow – including her own granddaughter – she decided to take a stand. She sued Goodyear and a jury awarded her $3.8 million, which was later thrown out by the U.S. Supreme Court based on the statute of limitations.

Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg stated in her dissent to the ruling: "Lilly Ledbetter was a supervisor at Goodyear Tire and Rubber’s plant in Gadsden, Alabama, from 1979 until her retirement in 1998. For most of those years, she worked as an area manager, a position largely occupied by men. Initially, Ledbetter’s salary was in line with the salaries of men performing substantially similar work. Over time, however, her pay slipped in comparison to the pay of male area managers with equal or less seniority. By the end of 1997, Ledbetter was the only woman working as an area manager and the pay discrepancy between Ledbetter and her 15 male counterparts was stark: Ledbetter was paid $3,727 per month; the lowest paid male area manager received $4,286 per month, the highest paid, $5,236."

In 2009, Congress passed the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act, removing the statute of limitations on discrimination suits. The Supreme Court had overturned her discrimination suit with Goodyear, since Ledbetter hadn’t filed within 180 days of receiving her first paycheck (despite whether she was aware of the discriminatory pay practices within those 180 days). The new act removed the statute of limitations. As his first official piece of legislation as president, Barack Obama signed the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act into law.

“When I set out on my Goodyear career in 1979, it wasn’t part of my grand plan to someday have my name be on a Supreme Court case or an act of Congress,” Ledbetter wrote in “Grace and Grit.” “I simply wanted to work hard and support my family. The rest, I believed, would take care of itself. Clearly, fate had other plans for this Alabama girl.”

Ledbetter’s children, Vickie Saxon and Phillip C. Ledbetter, did realize their mother’s dream of achieving a college education. Both are JSU alumni. Vickie earned a bachelor’s degree in management in 1980 and Phillip earned a bachelor’s in economics in 1983.

The Lilly Ledbetter Scholarship has been established in honor of Ledbetter to promote the education of deserving full-time undergraduate students enrolled at JSU. The scholarship will be awarded to entering first-time freshmen who have a 2.5 high school GPA or higher and demonstrate financial need.
