Academic Enhancement

The Department of Academic Enhancement & Tutoring Services experienced record growth and success during the 2013-2014 academic year. Students were scheduled for 22,858 individual or small group tutoring appointments throughout the year compared to 17,152 appointments scheduled during the 2012-2013 academic year. This represents an increase in tutorial support of 33.2%. During the fall 2013 semester, 762 students requested and received tutorial support for 876 courses with a pass rate of 87%. During the spring 2014 semester, 426 students requested and received tutorial support for 747 courses with a pass rate of 86%. Many students utilized more drop-in tutorial assistance during the spring semester compared to the fall semester. A total of 508 students received direct academic support either through the new drop-in math lab at the Academic Center for Excellence, supplemental instruction, or the new drop-in chemistry, biology, and physics lab at Martin Hall. Student use of direct academic support services including attendance to a new academic coaching pilot program increased by 63% compare to the previous academic year. Student surveys indicate a preference for drop-in math, chemistry, and physics assistance. Additionally, students and faculty have requested adding a research and writing lab to help them with writing scholarly papers in upper level courses.

The academic coaching pilot program reached out to over 400 students this past year to provide academic mentoring and counseling. This program utilizes student interns from the education and counseling departments as mentors to help guide these students and provide emotional support and connection for the purpose of helping them become academically successful. At-risk students were identified through transcript evaluations and referrals by faculty. These students were then contacted and asked to meet weekly with an academic coach. This is a voluntary program; however, many students met regularly with an academic coach and reported positive outcomes.

Students are also utilizing study hall and the late night hours at ACE. Over 700 students used the Academic Center for Excellence for study hall during the past year. Over 200 students logged study hall hours at the library through GradesFirst, our web-based student-retention management program. The SGA asked our department to remain open until 2 am through the year, and students really appreciated having a quiet place to study late at night.

Plans for next year include providing tutoring to freshman in the dorms through a collaborative effort with Kevin Hoult and the housing department. A full proposal for this program will be detailed in the next report.

The department also provides all academic support for student-athletes including the proactive determination of academic risk, study hall hours, tutorial support, and academic coaching. Direct academic support for student-athletes provided through the department has increased dramatically over the past year with a 43% increase in scheduled tutoring appointments, a 41% increase in the number of courses tutored and a 24% increase in the direct contact hours recorded through GradesFirst. This report reflects regularly scheduled peer tutoring only and does not reflect additional exam reviews, academic coaching, and tutoring sessions for courses out of the normal scope of tutoring services. Chart 1 illustrates the increase in structure academic support for student-athlete by academic year.
