TEACHING EXPERIENCE (JSU)

PSC 100. Introduction to American Government. Structure and organization of the American national government. Development of the United States Constitution and the federal system. Evolution of political parties, campaigns and elections, interest group pluralism, the U.S. Congress, the Presidency, and the federal courts.

PSC 102. State and Local Politics. A study of the organization, functions, and powers of state, county, and municipal governments in the United States. The development of state legislatures, state executive offices, and the administrative agencies of states. Comparative examinations of policy making in the states with an eye to the evolution of federalism.

PSC 103. Introduction to American Government – Honors. An in-depth examination of governmental politics, institutions and processes. Covers the development and evolution of the U.S. Constitution, political parties, campaigns and elections, interest group pluralism, the U.S. Congress, the Presidency, the federal courts and civil liberties.

PSC 230. Politics and Film. An exploration of politically consequential American film, especially Hollywood entertainment films in the 1930-1970 era. A text and media based experience providing students the opportunity to focus on documentary film, historical cinema, propaganda pictures or educative movies.

PSC 342. Political Parties. An examination of the historical development of political parties in the U.S., with special attention to the theory of party government. The composition, organization and function of American political parties on the national, state, and local levels.

PSC 352. The Legislative Process. An exploration of the legislative process at the national level. Consideration of the macro-congressional environment as well as micro-processes governed by House and Senate rules. Course inquiries include legislative recruitment, committee composition, chamber procedures, party leadership functions, the legislative reform initiatives.

PSC 410. Religion, Politics and Policy. A study of the intersection of religion and politics under the rubric of First Amendment constitutional law. Examines the historical background of freedom of religion in America beginning with the colonial era and advancing through the development of equal protection jurisprudence.

PSC 447. Politics and Public Opinion. A study of the ways in which electoral results and policy outcomes are led by public opinion. Begins with an examination of democratic theory, elite theory, historical polling assumptions, and modern survey methodology. Examines survey findings on differentiated demographic measures including economic criteria.

PSC 450. The National Executive. Studies the historical development of the American presidency with special attention to the evolution of power in the executive branch relative to the legislative branch. Highlights the outstanding features of each presidency. Compares the historical constitutional presidency with the modern administrative presidency.

PSC 458. Theory of Political Film. Examines the theoretical foundations of film with policy implications. Evaluates the movie industry in the context of classical political narratives. Describes and analyzes issues of leadership ethics, democratic viability and economic justice. Scrutinizes the impact of Hollywood movies upon culture and government.

PSC 512. Intergovernmental Relations. A study of the theory of federalism as set forth in the Federalist Papers, with application to federal institutions and processes in the U.S. The course examines the challenges faced by state and local governments, especially in the context of the national government deficit spending.

PSC 594. Constitutional Revision: Historical and Modern. Using an Independent Studies extended readings format, the course evaluates the evolution of constitutional amendment doctrine and strategy. Examines the challenges of the amendment process and the partial displacement of the process through the juridical activism of high courts.
