Honors Lecture - 11227 - UH 101 - 001

Travel broadens horizons, reduces prejudices, and makes people more empathetic, relatable, and valuable to future employers. In this class we will focus on two essential questions: 1. Why is it important to have a global worldview, and how can traveling help enhance this worldview? 2. What practical steps can students take to become confident and cultured travelers? Topics will include items such as how to get a passport, how to plan/budget a trip, domestic vs. study abroad, packing the perfect suitcase, and how to apply for study abroad programs and scholarships. Whether you are an experienced traveler or just starting to think about traveling, this seminar will help you focus your travel vision and set personal or study tour goals.

"Lincoln in the Bardo" is a novel written by American novelist George Saunders. On the plot level, it is about the death of Abraham Lincoln's son, Willie, and the President's grief over that very personal loss along with the knowledge that he is responsible for the deaths of so many men on life, responsibility, and consequences. The novel is set in the graveyard where Willie is laid to rest and the characters are the spirits who live there who do not understand why they are trapped where they are, and its use of many voices- including quotations from history books on Lincoln's presidency- will be a big part of our focus for the semester.
