Do you think that libraries are boring and only full of dusty old books? What if I told you that libraries are actually secret warriors fighting for your rights to access information freely? Using games, we will join the fight by examining issues like Intellectual Freedom, Censorship, Net Neutrality, and more that libraries are fighting to protect! The ultimate goal of the class is to help students cultivate a deeper understanding of these broad concepts and how each one affects life in a real world setting.

This course centers on The Making of a Poem: A Norton Anthology of Poetic Forms (ISBN: 978-0393321784) From there, each week, students and instructor will engage with the forms found in the text - a new one every week - across the semester, and will try their hands at writing in these forms themselves. Experience in creative writing is not expected, just a willingness to explore the ways in which poetry has been shaped in English for the last several hundred years. If you've ever wanted to write a sonnet on your favorite breakfast cereal, this is the course for you. While the topic is rooted in literature, the readings are selected across centuries and subject matter.

This course is a study of the fundamental activities, habits, and motives which affect consumer interest, intention, purchase, usage, evaluation, and disposal of product and services. Students have their dream lifestyle, and they want to be a millionaire. However, little do they know why Jeff Bezos can make 1 billion every day. This class will inspire students to discuss what is the difference between investment and consumption. It will encourage students to develop their self-concept - who they are, and what they would like to be, and how they live in their lives. It will help them recognize their current problems and evaluate the solutions, finally make wise decisions about what to purchase, where to purchase, and when to purchase products and services to reach and maintain their dream lifestyles.
