Managing Intellectual Property for Distance Education

Please join us as Liz Johnson, project manager for Advanced Learning Technologies at the University System of Georgia, presents an online seminar reviewing her school's process for managing intellectual property. The University System of Georgia has come up with a four-step process that effectively manages their IP program without creating unnecessary restrictions on faculty or students. Their process saves time and money, makes courses more compact, reduces licensing hassles, and ensures that copyright exemptions are applied appropriately.

By participating in this online seminar, you'll be able to:

- Arrange copyright exemptions into a protocol to assist in the selection of Intellectual Property
- Assign Intellectual Property a status according to its place in the protocol
- Apply a technique for assessing Intellectual Property for use in online courses
- Maintain reliable documentation
- Make Intellectual Property management a key step in your course development
- Create a well-structured Intellectual Property management plan
- Use centralized Intellectual Property management
